TIMOLEON NO. IV.

AN ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF KENTUCKY.

FELLOW-CITIZENS.

IMMEDIATELY after the government of America had determined on a neutral nation, during the conflicts of Europe, it was with much real delight that it was informed of the approbation of France, to the measures. The subsequent change, therefore, of unfriendliness to the cause on the part of our government, when France had once approved of a step which justice and policy demanded, to a far from being founded in a candid estimation of the rights which our sovereignty gave us, was unbecoming the liberality of a great and enlightened Republic.

As a proof, however, that no such emotion could ever have existed, either in the bosom of the people, or in the councils of the American nation, the friendly reception of citizen Genet, who, about this time, arrived from France, as minister plenipotentiary, was sufficient in itself, to do away an idea to entirely founded in injustice.

He had but a few days arrived at Charlestown, when he assumed an authority, which, in any other country but one that highly respected the cause of the French Republic, would have called down the severest reprobation of its government. He succeeded its government by an act which must have broken a line of neutrality, declared to the world, and which, if permitted, without control, would have been of sufficient malignity in its consequences, to have engaged her in a war with Great Britain. Private vessels were fitted out in the American ports, under the sole authority of the French Republic, to operate against the commerce of a nation with whom we were on terms of friendship, and whose enemy would have been more ruinous to us, than that of any other of the belligerent powers of Europe. Notwithstanding a line of conduct so glaringly atrocious in this minister, and which must have broken her neutrality, his passage from the southward to the seat of government, was marked with honor and acclamation, by the people. The government received him with that cordiality and friendliness, which past favors and present esteem for his nation dictated. It exonerated the French Republic of a train of conduct in its representative, which could only have flowed from a desire to convince France of its firm adherence to the cause of Liberty, and the measures which were pursued to ensure it. It excused the attempts which its minister had used to embody its citizens for the purpose of carrying on expeditions against nations, with whom we were at peace, to fit out prize vessels within the limits of the United States, to establish a particular judiciary in the nation, & to arraign its government at the tribunal of the people. This was a disposition on the part of our government, which could never have originated in coolness towards France, or in a predilection in favor of its enemies. Had the representative of any other nation have acted in a similar manner with the citizen Genet, the world would have marked that proper reprobation in our government, which a true knowledge of its rights and a becoming estimate of its dignity would have given rise to. From none but the minister of France, could such unparalleled conduct as he used, have been tamely submitted to, with impunity. To have suffered it to continue, would have been degrading to the United States, who saw the attack on its sovereignty, with emotions of regret, and not with those feelings of resentment which REPECTFULLY informs the public, that he is carrying on the said business in the brick house on Short street, opposite the Presbyterian meeting house, and nearly opposite the Market house, Lexington, in its various branches. He wants one or two apprentices, that can one well recommended.

Right lead to a? above with the nation which had delegated him. The consequent desire on the part of America, that the functions of this minister should be suspended, was, however, acceded to by France, with that apparent forbearance, the motive of which, could not long remain concealed. When the instructions of Genet were afterwards published at Philadelphia, with what astonishment must the world, and particularly the American government have viewed the duplicity of the French Republic? The purport of these instructions were that he should do all in his power by intrigue, by stratagem and open machination to involve these United States in a war with Britain. The president, however, at the same time that his firmness detected and exposed this hypocritical and criminal conduct in the French government, his moderation and forbearance evinced the highest examples of attachment to a people who deserved the severest inflictions of punishment, instead of subsequent manifestations of friendship and respect.

At this period the endeavors of the United States, to pay up a large and accumulating national debt to France, was evinced with all the propriety which the situation of the Republic required. The misfortunes of St. Domingo were also objects which attracted the humanity and beneficence of America to the people of that colony, and to the government of the Republic to which they were in subordination. They were attended to with real sympathy, and alleviated by every friendly assistance which its inhabitants required at our hands. Provisions were granted in abundance, large contributions were made to those who had fled to our country for safety, from one end of the continent to the other, and every decent respect was paid them, which could either be inspired by private misfortune or public friendship towards the mother country.

However unworthy the United States must have elicited the ancestral conduct of the French Republic, these malignant instances of hospitality and forbearance, on the part of our government and our citizens, are fully sufficient, with the dispassionate mind to do away the charge of unfriendliness, attached to America. She appears upon this occasion to have been governed by the most amiable maxim of the Christian philosophy, in rewarding the hypocritical and ingratitude of her enemy, with the purest manifestations of repeated good deeds. The successes of France were received with joy and admiration, her struggle for liberty approved of with general expressions of enthusiasm regard, the miseries of her unfortunate citizens listened to with emotions of sympathy and alleviated with the most generous liberality; at a moment when the inhospitable desire to bring down upon her all the misfortune of war, glowed with violence, inspired by a mistaken policy, in the bosom of its government. Who can view this contrast of conduct and disposition in the two Republics, without being shocked at the ingratitude of the one, and feeling every sentiment of esteem for the other?

LEGHORN, August 15.
Buonaparte's Secret Expedition.

Letters received here to day from Naples, bring advice that the English fleet which failed to Alexandria without meeting with the French fleet, has returned to Syracuse in Sicily, and taken in fresh water; after which it failed again for the coast of Africa. It is now confidently asserted, that the troops of general Buonaparte are landed, part at Alexandria in Egypt, and part at Alexandria in Syria.

PARIS, August 22.

The Count of Ruffia, has notified to the Divan, that it must declare either for or against France, as Russia cannot consent to any neutrality. The report of a Russian squadron having passed the Dardanelles, is renewed. It is thought that the Russian force in the Black Sea consists of 15 sail of the line, 12 frigates, and 3 cutters.

September 3.

The fears of a renewal of hostilities between France and Austria arise principally from the differences, which a wise between the two powers on the subject of the fate of the Griffons. This affair is happily about being terminated, or at least to obtain an issue favorable to the French and Helvetic republics. This is what is written from Bale, 8 Fructidor, (25th Aug.) "We have just now received the agreeable news that the Griffons have decided to vote for their being united to the Helvetic republic.

Gen. Desfourneaux, appointed commissioner of the government at Gualaloupe, yesterday took leave of the directory, and of the minister of marine, he goes to Rochefort, from whence will depart the expedition prepared for that destination. The other officers civil and military who are to make part of this expedition, are already arrived at that port.

We are assured that Buonaparte having met six Swedish merchantmen in the Mediterranean destined to Naples, ordered the six captains to come on board of him, and having found their papers regular, he represented to them, that to remove from the English all knowledge of his route, he ought to oblige them to follow his fleet; but not wishing to be the cause of an injury to them, which to considerable a delay must necessarily occasion, he only asked of them their word of honor, that they would enter into the harbour of Cagliari, in Sardinia, and that they would remain there some days, in order to give him time to pursue his course; the captains gave him their word of honor, and have acted rigidly up to their engagement. His rank probity of the French general is a strong contrast to the inconstant conduct of the English. This article was pasted up at the exchange at Stockholm, by order of the Swedish government.

September 4.

The Publiciste of the 15 Fructidor, September 2d, says, we have just received the first number of the Milan Gazette. Of our fleet the following article:

"The aristocrats, who mistake their wishes for their hopes, and their hopes for realities, have reported that Malta was blockaded by the English and that the French squadron was pursued by them, nothing can be more false. Every intelligence announces that Buonaparte is at Alexandria. The English have not dared to pursue him in the Mediterranean there is only a single English squadron, and that is in want of provisions. It has not a man for debarking—even its compliment of crew is incomplete. Malta has nothing to apprehend from it, and it can never prevent the arrival of the Prussian convoys. The Genius of Liberty—the genius of the republic—the genius of Buonaparte watch over Malta."

September 5.

We do not know what to think of the measures pursued in the United States. Some say their government is profiting its hostile preparations, with a rupture with France, and has declared all the treaties null. Others assert that these measures proposed by the president John Adams, have been rejected by the house of representatives and senate.

Some days ago it was said in one of the papers that Dr. Logan had been sent hither by the French party in America to conciliate all, and that he had partly succeeded. It is now said he is come on private business, and affairs relative to science, and that the directory fearing that his presence might give place to some misunderstanding, had him infatuated to him, that it would be well not to prolong his stay here, and that he is accordingly on the point of going home.

LONDON, September 9.

According to private letters, as well as the foreign articles in the Hamburg masts, which arrived yesterday, the emperor of Russia seems determined to put the pacific pretensions of the Turks, and their disclaiming any knowledge of Buonaparte's expedition, to a speedy test; a Russian fleet of 14 sail of the line 10 frigates, and 60 galleys with land forces on board, have actually sailed from the ports in the Crimea for the Mediterranean sea; and the refusal or admission of this fleet through the Dardanelles will inevitably become the signal for peace or war with the porte.

PHILADELPHIA, October 25.

Yesterday arrived at Chester, the brig George, Captain Gibson, in 37 days, and the brig Venus in 27 days from Bordeaux.

Report says, the Venus brings an account of hostilities having actually commenced between the emperor and France.

October 26.

LATEST FROM FRANCE.

The express which we dispatched to Chester did not arrive till late last evening. We however have endeavored to translate a few articles for this day. To-morrow we shall present our readers with much interesting intelligence. It does not appear that hostilities had actually commenced between the emperor and the French, though every appearance existed that they would in a short time. An article in a Paris paper of the 10th of September mentions, that a letter from Dusseldorf says the French army is in full march towards Hanover.

In consequence of an expectation at Vienna of hostilities recommending every person who had any connexion with Baradotte, from his physician to his cook have been arrested. It is said the number imprisoned amounts to 60. An article from Cologne, dated September 4, says "an express which arrived here this day, brings intelligence that the French troops entered Andernach on the Rhine (circle of Westphalia) the day before yesterday. Thus the line of demarcation must be either broken or annulled."

The Neapolitan ambassador was about to quit Paris. M. De Neruna is arrived at Paris in quality of ambassador extraordinary from the Court of Portugal.

Under the head of Constantinople, August 17, we find it confidentially asserted that Buonaparte is in possession of Alexandria and Alexandretta, but had experienced much greater opposition than he expected. Particulars to morrow.

A Vergennes (Vermont) paper says—"Mr. Lyon was brought to town yesterday and is now confined in our jail.

YELLOW FEVER.

The fever has, during the past week, sustained but little declension. The imprudent return of many of the citizens must be considered as the great cause of this. Most of those now infected are persons of this description, and there are instances in which whole families that have returned are threatened with death.

The small number of new cases reported have furnished a false assurance of safety. Several physicians do not now report. Among them is Dr. Mogen, who alone has had on some days more new cases than the whole number published by the board. If there be a general return of the citizens, the disease may continue for months.

The disease has parted with its violence every where but in New-York and Wilmington.

Extract from the preface of the Grand jury of Glynn county Georgia, at their last term.

We present as a grievance of the first magnitude the opposition of our representatives in congress to the wise measures of the executive, and lament that such conduct should materially injure this country.

The Superior Court of Newbern N. C. adjourned on the 6th day of the term owing to a malignant fever raging at present in that town.

The Batavian republic has offered its mediation in adjusting the existing differences between France and America. Shimpeppenick, the Dutch minister, at Paris, is engaged in the subject.

The treaty of commerce between France and Batavia is on the eve of conclusion.

The French directory have been obliged to yield to the united representations of the Danish, Prussian, Swedish and Spanish ministers, relative to their former treatment of neutral vessels, which is to undergo a complete remediation. All the French privateers in the Mediterranean are called in.

The Ottoman Porte has declared war against France.

Accounts from Constantinople mention the conflagration of Arnoult, a large town on the Bosphorus, which has been completely destroyed in the space of six hours.

DIED,

—, lately at his house in Kent county, state of Delaware, Warner Mifflin,

—, in London, aged, 31, Mr. William Jenkins, a clerk in the Bank. His gentleman measured the extraordinary height of seven feet inches and from an apprehension of his body being stolen for the purposes of dissection the couple was, by permission of the Bank Directors, interred in that part of the garden court of the bank which formerly constituted an appendage to the church yard.

—, lately at Battle, in England, Mr. Ingall, aged one hundred and twenty years. He had resided at the lodgings where he died, but one week. The reason he alluded for quitting the Abbey, where he had been a servant, and chiefly in the capacity of a butler near 95 years, is said to be that his nurse used him ill, and he feared she would shorten his days by some act of violence, founded, most probably, on the childish conceit of old age. He was very fond of triffling, which being intimated to prince William, of Gloucester, when he lately visited him, his highness presented him with a pound of the best trout, accompanied with a one pound note, which the old man apparently received with great pleasure.

Lexington, November 21.

Answer of the Senate to the Governor's Speech.

SIR,

THE information we have received from you respecting the state of the commonwealth, is an evidence of its increasing prosperity; and as we are sensible that among the causes of this prosperity, we must give a distinguished place to your exertions for its promotion, we sincerely congratulate you on their success.

The several measures you have recommended to our consideration deserve and shall merit our attention; and in every circumstance which may tend to promote the welfare of our common country, you may be assured of our hearty concurrence.

We are attached to the federal constitution; the peace, safety and happiness of the confederated states depend upon their union, and the bond which connects them should be sacred; as we value these blessings we would preserve their source pure and untainted; the superior importance of your communications on this subject, will procure them early and mature consideration.

JOHN CAMPBELL,

Speaker of the senate pro tem.

Answer of the House of Representatives to the Governor's speech.

To His Excellency James Garrard, Esq.—
Governor of the State of Kentucky.

Your communication to the general assembly, fully evinces that "the prosperity of this commonwealth is an object, towards which your desires and endeavors have been faithfully directed."—The objects of a local nature, there in recommended, will meet with our ready attention.

Although it is with pride and pleasure we learn that executive observation and scrutiny has been able to discover so few infidels of interest in legislation, yet that pride and pleasure is considerably dispelled when we are called to exert an active and progressive interest in the general government. Upon these facts, we believe, for you, the sentiments of almost every citizen of this commonwealth; upon no great and agitated question, among a people entitled to discussion, did there ever exist greater unanimity—it could not have been otherwise. Could the enlightened citizens of Kentucky, whom we represent, ever deliberate, whether they would surrender the freedom of the press? Could they ever hesitate, in depreciating an act which violates the constitution (in the person of the trustee) the sacred trial by jury? It is impossible. The free and uncontaminated influence of European press, and which has been turned to support that multitude of infidels, than ungodly effigies of those acts, could have been expected; and although we have to lament the minds of our country have been thus early dethroned by such laws, yet we doubt not that constitutional efforts may yet be made, to procure their immediate repeal.

Equally with you, we doze deplore the war to which we are likely to be plunged—a war engendered by mistaken policy, and we fear, will be ruinous in its consequences to America at large; but more especially to this infant but rising commonwealth. The falsehoods injurious to the political character of this commonwealth, which have been propagated in the eastern states, are too groundless and contemptible, to deserve legislative con-

Kentucky, faithful to the federal compact which binds together the American states, conscious that it is the rock of their political salvation, and determined from duty, and impelled by oath, to prefer it inviolate, disdains all calumnies which go to question or arraign her attachment to the federal constitution;—if the want of a blind confidence in, and attachment to, those who at present administer the general government; if the withholding an unqualified approbation of every act of that government, however impolitic, destructive or unconstitutional; if a refusal in the free men of this commonwealth to prostrate themselves before the chief magistrate of the union, and only upon promise (but not performance) of property or the (possessions of country no) a war deemed by them ruinous and destructive; if conduct like this be countenanced, the citizens of Kentucky merit confine.—But if the citizens of Kentucky have more highly revered their constitution, than those whose acts in their opinion, have gone to its violation; if they have endeavored peaceably & rightfully to prefer that constitution inviolate, and with the decency and candor which become freemen, remonstrated against such violation; if a free and public discussion of the deepest rights of men, is not yet considered as criminal; if to be the last to consent, but to that person who presides over the Union, is a very high and justly required of the freedom of Kentucky; if these, and such like proceedings, be not countenanced, or criminal, Kentucky merits neither.

Impressed with these sentiments, it remains only to assure you, that you may rely on our ready concurrence in any measure which may tend to promote the honor and interest of the union at large, and of this commonwealth in particular.

MORRIS MILES, C. C.

A MEETING of a number of the persons propounding to institute St. Andrew's Society at Lexington, was held in consequence of advertisement, at Mr. McGowen's tavern, on Saturday the 17th inst, at which time the rules, after a full discussion, were unanimously agreed to.

The anniversary meeting will be held at the same place on Friday the 30th inst. Such gentlemen as intend to become members will please to take notice, that it has been resolved to convene on that day, exactly at 12 o'clock—dinner to be on the table at two. As there will be a good deal of business to transact, it is requested that gentlemen will be punctual in their attendance.

The primary object in forming this society, is, to afford all the aid and assistance which their funds may at different times permit to persons emigrating to this state, either from Scotland, or from any of the states of the union, who may require advice and assistance—to encourage their countrymen to such emigration, by holding out the hand of fraternity, when they may arrive as strangers in this country. It is further provided by the rules, that the widows and children of such who fall within the description there contained, shall share in the relief within the extent of their funds.—Such being the general view on which the society is to be established, it is presumed that no farther inducements will be necessary to enrage a general will amongst Scotchmen in this state, and the descendants of parents, one of whom has been originally of that country, cordially to unite their endeavors to complete the foregoing intentions, and that as many as can conveniently, will attend at the ensuing anniversary.

SACRED TO THE MUSES.

ON A NEWS-PAPER.

HAIL blest conveyance to the youthful fair,
Of all that worth should tell, or virtue bear!
Hail! thou infatuer of the truly brave,
Who scorn a tyrant, and despise a slave,
Who can inform whole nations, truth and art,
And route to worthy deeds, the youthful heart!
Ye merchants! to my humble lays attend!
And at my flings, ye grateful farmers bend:
Mechanics! my unbound power confers!
Ye beaux & belles, who pride yourselves on dress:
Old, young, fair, homely, rich and poor allow,
I ease affliction's throb, and clear the brou!
Give weight to freedom, elegance and worth,
Oft lead to Heaven, and always gladden earth.
Haste then, to gratitude and interest true,
The PRESS to favor, which will favor you.
